Description	The bird was about the size of a dunlin and was hanging out with dunlins. It appeared dark in the head (with maybe some rufous spots) which extended to the throat which seemed streaked to me. Primaries appeared to extend beyond the tail. It was clean white underneath. The back seemed a basic brown with some rufous touches. Legs and bill seemed dark/black. The bill was longer than dunlin and more noticeably or evenly down curved.

Behavior (be as detailed as possible about what the bird was doing)

It was foraging with other shorebirds in a flat sandy beach pond in the southwest of the Gull Point sand spit. It's feeding behavior was similar to the dunlins but it seemed to have a rounder head and it put its face in the shallow water more. It walked along the shore with a dunlin at one point and its gait was similar to dunlin. I did not see it fly.

Separation from similar species (How you eliminated others)

The difference in bill shape and length in comparison to dunlin is what first caught my eye, along with its clear white underside. It was larger than the white-rumped and semi-palmated sandpipers that were nearby.

Discussion – anything else relevant to the observation that will aid the committee in evaluating it:

I am the seasonal shorebird monitor at Presque Isle and feel comfortable knowing when I have something different at hand. I thought curlew sandpiper, but knowing it was a rarity, I sent my description and photos to Jerry McWilliams who suggested I submit it to you. The photos I'm sending were taken with an iPhone6S through the scope from the observation platform there. They are not great. I will submit to eBird once I have confirmation here.

Are you positive of your identification ? (Why or why not)

I am not entirely positive, as I could not get a closer look, due to access restrictions at Gull Point. But with Jerry's recommendation, I feel confident enough to submit it!
