Description

Gull slightly smaller than ring-billed gulls. Orange-reddish droopy bill with a black tip, and bright orange legs. Obvious black spot behind eye. I think it was a first winter individual because it a some tan-brownish coloration on the wings. I saw it in flight, in the water, and on the shore. I had just seen the black-headed gull at john Heinz, so I had an excellent mental image of what the gull should look like.

Behavior (be as detailed as possible about what the birdBird was mostly loafing among ring-billed gulls. Loafing in the water and on the shore line.

Separation from similar species (How you eliminated others)

Eliminated bonaparte's due to larger size, orange legs, and larger orangish bill.

Discussion – anything else relevant to the observation that will aid the committee in evaluating it:

I don't carry a camera when I bird, so these cell phone images are the best I have. I'll understand if the committee chooses not to accept it, but I am certain it was a blackheaded gull (after very careful and cautious consideration and with excellent lighting and close looks). The bird of interest in the photos is the lone bird, in the background, standing on a rock (back and right of center in the photos).

Are you positive of your identification? (Why or why not)

I'll understand if the committee chooses not to accept it, but I am certain it was a black-headed gull (after very careful and cautious consideration and with excellent lighting and close looks). 100% positive especially because I had seen a black-headed gull earlier that day, and I was using my Sibley's guide to help with identification at the time of the sighting.
