Exact Site (E.g. Name of park, lake, road)	185 Tuscarora Drive
Habitat	Backyard, lawn, woods
Distance to bird	25 to 60 feet
Viewing conditions	Clear views
Optical equipment used	Swarovski 8x42, Nikon D610 with Nikkor 80 - 400 mm lens
Description	Similar in size to mourning doves (MD) with which it would loosely associate. Paler in color than MD but with horizontal white line along edge of closed wing. Shorter tail that was blunt compares to MD. After chasing a MD away from the feeder it bobbed up and down in a manner similar to a spotted sandpiper. Small black, sort of crescent shaped mark on lateral neck. Pinkish feet. Pale blue periorbital coloration. When it opened its wings there was a distinct white stripe across the wing.
Behavior (be as detailed as possible about what the bird was doing)	Mostly resting in the leaf litter at the edge of the woods with MDs. Enjoyed being in the sun. Would perch on a rock in the waterfalls (without water on) after the rocks apparently warmed up. Drank from the edge of the ice on the koi pond with the other doves. Bobbed its tail up and down for about 10-15 seconds after getting into a scrap with a MD. Fed from the ground feeders and the ground. Perched low in a bush on the edge of the woods and higher up in the hemlock trees and an oak tree. After feeding more voraciously than usual on February 15th it apparently flew off and has not been seen since.

Separation from similar species (How you eliminated others)

The white wing stripes.

Description	Paler color than mourning doves with more gray. White horizontal line in wing when closed. Larger white patch when wing open. Fairly bright blue periorbital color. Squared off tail instead of pointed like the mornings. About the same size as the mourning dove. Acted aggressively toward a mourning dove that was trying to feed at the same feeder. Would rest in low bushes and on the ground for a large part of the day along with mourning doves. Was present Friday through Monday, the 15th. On the last morning the dove fed voraciously and when I returned home at lunchtime it was gone, never to be seen again.
Behavior (be as detailed as possible about what the bird was doing)	Rested with mourning doves in the sun for hours at a time. Attacked a mourning dove that was trying to feed at the same feeder.

Separation from similar species (How you eliminated others)

White wing patch and squared off tail plus the blue around the eyes.

Are you positive of your identification ? (Why or why not)

Very positive! Had a few other birders come to see the dove who all agreed with the id.
