

#666

666-C1-1985

On Jan. 10 I saw a bird fly into the upper branches of a Mountain Ash tree. Something about the bird caught my eye. Although it was in the company of several Robins, something seemed different. On closer inspection I saw the orange on the chin and throat and the black breast band. I also saw the marks on the head and wings but my view of them was not as good as the neck and breast. My book told me it was a Varied Thrush. I have watched flocks of Robins since in hopes of seeing it again but so far no luck.
